The Eliot School of Fine & Applied Arts Celebrates Boston Design Week and Their Community's Creations with a Spring Showcase

The event will take place on Saturday, April 27 from 11 AM – 3 PM in the Eliot Schoolyard.

Boston, MA

Next weekend, The Eliot School of Fine & Applied Arts is hosting a Spring Showcase as part of Boston Design Week 2024, which includes a multitude of events and activities occurring between April 23 - May 5. The school is utilizing the occasion of this annual city-wide celebration of designers and the organizations that support them to recognize the work of the students, instructors, and staff who contribute their time, energy, and creativity to make the Eliot School the unique and vibrant community it is.

The showcase will feature artwork that was created in or inspired by a class the artist took at the Eliot School between July 1, 2023 and the time of the showcase. Both displaying artwork at and attending the showcase as a viewer is completely FREE and no RSVP is necessary. The showcase will be held in the Eliot Schoolyard at 24 Eliot St. in Jamaica Plain with the option, in the event of unfavorable weather, to move inside the historic Eliot Schoolhouse to the sewing and art rooms on the second floor.

“The showcase is meant to bring together all our community to share their love for the arts as creatives themselves,” Director of Adult Learning & Engagement Verónica Ramírez Martell said. “It will be a space to share with each other what we’re proud of and what we’ve learned.”

Participating in this event isn’t just a great way to get to know the Eliot School and its passionate community better, it is also an opportunity to connect with and learn from experienced artisans, as well as amateur enthusiasts about their artistic experiences and creations. This sensational showcase is an ideal event for those in the Jamaica Plain and Greater Boston community who are interested in meeting fellow art lovers and crafting fanatics, picking up some recommendations and inspiration, and/or finding a new favorite art class.
